MESSAGE FROM WORCESTER STATE UNIVERSITY PRESIDENT BARRY M. MALONEY

Worcester State University is excited to host its first Brotherhood Conference. Its goal is to cultivate leadership among our first generation and/or BIPOC/ALANA students, and especially among the men who are attending the Massachusetts State Universities. Data show that fewer males in general are heading to college, and that those of color face more challenges to graduation. Your participation in this conference should not only help you meet those challenges, it should help us – your state universities – help you to do just that.

Worcester State has worked with city partners on the 100 Males to College program, and with many partners on the state's largest Early College program, which help high school students envision themselves on campus, working toward degrees. And once here – whether it is Worcester State or another Massachusetts university – we want to see students succeed. We offer programs such as the Alternatives for Individual Development Program (A.I.D.), which supports first generation, economically diverse, and/or ALANA (African American, Latine, Asian, and Native American)/BIPOC (Black, Indigenous, and People of Color) students, from the time of their transition to college until graduation. One A.I.D. initiative is the Young Men's Group – a community of university students, faculty, and staff. Several of them are leading today's efforts.

What you learn at the Brotherhood Conference should aid your personal growth and success. It is my hope that you will come away inspired to lead others to achieve, as well.

A BROTHERHOOD FOR SUCCESS

Uplifting One Another On The Road To Excellence

MISSION/VISION

Our mission is to uplift and empower our men by affirming their experiences, engaging in team building workshops, building upon their own identity and knowledge of self, and enhancing their connection to a network of first generation and/or ALANA/BIPOC men in our greater community.

This community will include high school students, university students, professionals, educators, and community leaders. Our overall goal is to increase our network to assist in access, retention, and graduation of our first generation, low income and/or ALANA/BIPOC males of color in their journey to higher learning.

Together we can examine, model and transform this experience into a stronger brotherhood of excellence.

“Racial Trauma: Skills and Interventions to Address Racial Trauma” [9:35am -10:25am]

Room: S*205

Workshop Description: Ongoing experiences of racism, racist bias and exposure can often lead to racial trauma. Race-based traumatic stress (RBTS) has been identified in a 2007 paper written by Carter on, ‘Racism and Psychological and Emotional Injury’ to be comparable to DSM-5 criteria for PTSD. In this workshop, we will engage on how racism can create trauma, identify skills and interventions to properly address racial trauma, and explore ways in which we can embark to heal.

Type of Workshop: Interactive, Identifying resources, tools and strategies.

Target Audience: High School Students and Undergraduate Students.

Eric Roldan

Eric is committed to breaking barriers to treatment that include stigma and access to mental health treatment for marginalized populations.

“Failure Is an Option” [9:35am -10:25am]

Room: S*219

Workshop Description: Failure is essential for success. It strengthens the roots in your minds, engages internalization of those thoughts and feelings of fear so that you can confront yourself early for the next best you. In this workshop, we will talk more about the misconceptions of failure as I share my journey in the world of business and education. I will share how I was able to reframe my experience and leverage them by simply trusting in my skills and myself. This is the psychological and social secret to turning your next failure into success.

Type of Workshop: Interactive

Target Audience: High School Students and Undergraduate Students.

Geraldo Maldonado
